Digital mental health (dMH) services and resources are digital technologies and platforms providing mental health support and intervention, including websites, programs and apps. Digital mental health services and resources offer accessible, affordable, and discreet care, overcoming traditional barriers to help-seeking. They have the potential to enhance standard care by optimising health practitioners' time and filling service gaps.

Service and resource types

Psychological Intervention	A structured, interactive program or service that addresses a specific mental health issue.
Symptom Management and Wellbeing Tools	Play an active role in prevention or intervention but are not designed to serve as a complete intervention.
Counselling	Supports people to work through a problem or crisis and provides information on where to get further help.
Peer Support	Facilitates connection to a trained peer worker or a community of peers.
Screening and Referral	Conducts screening and/or provides referrals to digital and/or face-to-face mental health services.
Information	Provides information and advice on mental health topics.

Using resources with Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander People

While there is a lot of diversity among Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander People and their perspectives on wellbeing, many digital resources are based on the social emotional wellbeing framework (SEWB). This framework takes a holistic view of health and recognises the impact of connection to Country, culture, spirituality, family, and community on the wellbeing of Australia's First Nations People.

What is included in this directory

All services and resources listed in this directory are:

- · Developed in Australia
- Free to use or provided at cost (i.e. non-commercial)
- Informed by established evidence-based therapeutic approaches or have undergone sufficient evaluation.
- Government-funded, or developed by reputable organisations and experts in the mental health field.

Research Evidence for Digital Mental Health

Not all digital mental health services and resources available online are based on evidence; eMHPrac exclusively lists services and resources that are evidence-based or evidence-informed.

What does the research say?

Digital psychological treatment programs have the strongest evidence for effectiveness in reducing mental health symptoms.

- In clinical trials, there is strong evidence that digital mental health treatments outperform inactive controls¹ and treatment as usual² in symptom reduction. Digital mental health treatment programs generally have good acceptability and users report high levels of satisfaction³.
- Digital mental health treatment programs with added therapist support perform as well as face-to-face treatment in clinical trials for some conditions^{3, 4, 5}. There is strong evidence that therapist-guided digital mental health treatments are both cost effective and clinically effective in routine care⁶.
- Research shows that fully self-guided programs are also effective in symptom reduction⁷, 8, and are most suited for people with sub-threshold anxiety and depression or mild symptoms².
- Digital treatments are also effective for people with moderate to severe symptoms^{2,9} or more complex mental health conditions, though therapist-support or blended care is recommended for these groups^{10, 11}.
- The evidence for digital mental health treatments is most established for anxiety and depression^{2,3,12}. There is also growing evidence for a range of other mental health conditions including substance use^{1,13}, PTSD¹⁴, and suicidality^{15,16}.

The evidence regarding symptom management and wellbeing tools, which may include apps or programs designed to enhance wellbeing, is varied. Some apps have been shown to have small positive effects for reducing symptoms of anxiety, stress and depression and improving wellbeing when used regularly^{17,18}. Before recommending a tool, we advise that practitioners check that its content and function are consistent with evidence-based practice.

What is the evidence for digital resources for Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander People?

Stay Strong apps^{19,20} and MindSpot programs²¹ significantly improved psychological distress, anxiety and depressive symptoms in Australian First Nations participants. Other evidence-based resources have been evaluated for cultural barriers to engagement in this population, such as Beyond Now²².

Check out our research evidence fact sheet to find out more about the research evidence for each resource type.

Key Digital Mental Health Platforms

In addition to the eMHPrac online dMH resource directory, these online search portals can help health practitioners find safe, appropriate digital mental health services and resources for patients and clients, and guidance on how they can be used in practice.

medicare Mental Health

Medicare Mental Health

https://www.medicarementalhealth.gov.au/

A national digital mental health website from the Australian Government helping all Australians access mental health and wellbeing resources. Medicare Mental Health aims to make timely mental health advice, assessment and treatment more accessible, supporting people seeking mental health support for themselves, or someone else.

WellMob

https://wellmob.org.au/

WellMob brings together over 500 online social, emotional and cultural wellbeing (SEWB) resources for Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander People. The website summarises and links to other websites, apps, podcasts, videos, helplines, social media and online programs that practitioners can use in and out of session with their First Nations clients. There are also training resources and workforce development content in understanding SEWB models of care, trauma informed practice and other best practice ideas.

National Safety and Quality Digital Mental Health Standards

https://www.safetyandquality.gov.au/standards/national-safety-and-quality-digital-mental-health-standards

The National Safety and Quality Digital Mental Health (NSQHS) Standards, released in November 2020, include 59 actions to describe the level of care and safeguards that a digital mental health service should provide. Their website includes a list of all Australian digital mental health services that have been accredited to the NSQDMH Standards.

Black Dog Institute Health Professionals Resource and Education Hub

https://cop.learning.blackdoginstitute.org.au/#/

A free learning hub helping health professionals access evidence-based digital resources. Includes free, evidence-based webinars and online learning modules designed for GPs and allied health professionals.

How To Use This Guide

The eMHPrac Directory for Health Practitioners lists safe, evidence-based Australian digital mental health resources. Use this guide to discover evidence-based interventions and tools for your clients, along with selected information sites where service gaps exist.

Finding the right service

Start with topic or audience: Choose a mental health topic (e.g. anxiety) or audience (e.g. LGBTIQA+ people). For mixed needs (e.g. anxiety services for adolescents), check both sections or use our online directory.

Refine using icons and tags: Use the visual indicators to guide your search.

- Service Accredited by the National Safety and Quality Digital Mental Health Standards
- * Health practitioner guidance available within program.
- COST Services are free in most cases. Costs appear only when relevant.
- AGES Any age restrictions where specified by the service (if not mentioned in-text).
- Crisis services offer immediate support to help people stay safe and manage urgent mental health or situational distress.

Matching services to your practice and client needs

Building your resource toolkit: Consider your practice context first. If you work with specific populations, have long waitlists, or need reliable discharge recommendations, familiarise yourself with relevant services that address these ongoing needs.

Finding resources for specific clients: Match resources to individual client needs, for example online peer support for an isolated client with alcohol use issues.

Best practice: Test services before recommending to check safety, suitability, and effectiveness. Provide clear rationale and work collaboratively so resources align with clients' preferences and goals.

Digital Resources for Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander People

Using Resources with Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander People

Many of the digital resources created for Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander People are based on the social emotional wellbeing framework (SEWB). When using digital resources with First Nations People, practitioners should endeavour to have an understanding of this framework which takes a holistic view of health and recognises the impact of connection to Country, culture, spirituality, family, and community on wellbeing. The perspectives of the patient or client on mental health and wellbeing should also be considered when selecting appropriate resources as these will vary between individuals.

The resources listed here have been developed specifically for Australia's First Nations People or have been shown to be appropriate to use with this population. To find other appropriate resources for your clients or patients, please visit WellMob.

Find more information on the SEWB framework

Visit WellMob to find more digital resources for Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander People

- Service Accredited by the National Safety and Quality Digital Mental Health Standards
- Health practitioner guidance available within program.
- COST Services are free in most cases. Costs appear only when relevant.
- AGES Any age restrictions where specified by the service (if not mentioned in-text).

Education. Guidance. Support.

eMHPrac is funded by the Australian Government to raise health practitioner awareness and knowledge of digital mental health. eMHPrac aims to empower the Australian health and wellbeing workforce to incorporate digital mental health resources into regular treatment, building capacity and capability to improve treatment opportunities for all Australians.

The project is led by Queensland University of Technology in partnership with Black Dog Institute, Menzies School of Health Research and University Centre for Rural Health, University of Sydney.

The information provided in this guide is intended for health practitioners. Whilst the resources listed here were developed by credible sources and most are government-funded, health practitioners should independently investigate, evaluate and verify the content and credentials of any resource and use best judgement within the scope of their training and role to assess suitability for any particular patient or client. The resources listed in this guide are not exhaustive and represent only Australian products.
