Digital Mental Health

Digital mental health (e-mental health) comprises services, programs or apps, delivered via online, mobile or phone based platforms. They may be self-driven or practitioner guided and can be used alone or in combination with face-to-face therapy.

Funded by the Australian Government

The eMHPrac e-Mental Health in Practice Project is funded by the Australian Government and aims to raise health practitioner awareness and knowledge of digital mental health through the provision of free training and support to GPs, Allied Health professionals, service providers working with Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people, and a range of other practitioners. eMHPrac is led by Queensland University of Technology in partnership with Black Dog Institute, Menzies School of Health Research and University Centre for Rural Health, University of Sydney.

DISCLAIMER:

The information provided throughout this guide is intended for information purposes only. Whilst many of the services and resources in this guide are government-funded, health practitioners should independently investigate, evaluate and verify the content and credentials of any service or resource before choosing to use it or refer a user to it.

The services and resources listed in this guide are not exhaustive and represent primarily Australian products.

National Safety and Quality Digital Mental Health Standards

The National Safety and Quality Digital Mental Health (NSQDMH) Standards aim to improve the quality of digital mental health service provision, and to protect service users and their support people from harm.

The NSQDMH Standards were officially released on 30 November 2020. Further information can be found here: <https://www.safetyandquality.gov.au/standards/national-safety-and-quality-digital-mental-health-standards>

Research Evidence

The growth of digital technologies enables those experiencing mental health conditions to have greater access and engagement with psychological treatment.^{1,2} There is now considerable research showing that internet-delivered cognitive behavioural therapy programs are an effective, acceptable and practical form of health care for anxiety, depressive disorders, panic disorder, post-traumatic stress disorder, insomnia, pain management and phobias.^{2,3} These programs can be as effective as face-to-face treatment, particularly if there is additional practitioner support.^{4,5} The expansion of online mental health resources has broadened the range of programs available to include a variety of mental health conditions and populations.
