

Digital Mental Health for High School Teachers

HOW CAN DIGITAL MENTAL HEALTH HELP?

As a teacher, you are placed in a unique position. As an authority figure within the lives of your students, you often find yourself holding great influence over both their schooling and personal lives. Due to this unique role, it is not uncommon for students to turn to you, someone they trust and respect, during tough times. Parents and families of students may also disclose concerns about emotional or behavioural difficulties at home.

It is important to know how to best support students and families when they come to you for guidance or advice about their wellbeing and mental health. While it may involve seeking the advice of your guidance officer or school psychologist, it is also important to be able to point students and families in the right direction.

Australian digital mental health services (e.g. websites, online programs and apps) offer publicly available, evidence-based mental health information, support and treatment for students and families, and the majority of these services are free. Many digital resources are self-driven, but some offer free remote guidance from a health practitioner. Browse the list of digital mental health resources below for a range of options that are suitable for students and families.

The team at eMHprac are committed to enhancing the awareness and knowledge that health practitioners in Australia hold about digital mental health. We can help you to support patients, clients and others through a wide range of publicly available resources from Australian mental health organisations.

Digital mental health resources are best suited for people with low-to-moderate symptoms. If you are unsure about the suitability of digital mental health resources for a student or family, it is best to suggest they seek help with qualified professionals, such as a school psychologist or their family GP.
