

Managing the Mental Health of Health Professionals and First Responders

WHAT CAUSES WORKPLACE DISTRESS?

Health professionals and first responders face many unique workplace challenges that can negatively impact mental health or make it more challenging to manage existing mental health problems. Shift work, balancing workload demands, competency pressures, and role ambiguity can have a cumulative effect on mental wellbeing. Additionally, exposure to death, violence, deliberate self-harm, suicide, or restraint practices can be traumatic. These intense situational and interpersonal events require health professionals to constantly engage in self-regulatory processes, causing emotional labour. Burnout and mental health problems can lead to days out of role, job dissatisfaction, increased use of alcohol and other substances, and can even affect physical health and wellbeing.

HOW CAN DIGITAL MENTAL HEALTH HELP?

Digital mental health interventions offer a discreet, reliable, free or low cost, and convenient option for busy health professionals. Digital interventions can be used in addition to existing workplace resources, clinical supervision, team building and mental health referral pathways.
